What are Second Wines?

In the region of Bordeaux, historically, producers are bound by the Appellation Controlee (It's the governing body that controls the quality of Bordeaux Wines. Invariably, Quality varies inversely with Quantity, hence, wines like Latour for instance, can only produce X number of bottles given X hectares of land. So what do they do with the remaining grapes? They produce a Second label under the same flagship but a different name. These wines are normally deemed as value for money wines!
